To Whom it May Concern,

I am writing this letter to recommend Eric Griswold to get his teaching credential at San Diego State University. Eric was a substitute teacher in the classroom I work in for three consecutive weeks as he filled in for our teacher Chelsea in her absence. Our classroom is a moderate/severe special education classroom and I was very impressed with the way that Eric was able to adapt to our students' variety of needs immediately.

On the first day he worked with us, he showed up early and familiarized himself with the schedule and the lesson plans Chelsea left for him. After asking me a few clarifying questions, he was able to lead the class independently all day, seamlessly running through the plans. He was quickly able to recognize the different needs of each student and cater to them. Throughout the time he was with us, he would occasionally add his own lessons to the schedule covering topics including culture, geography, biology and more. He even designed custom name-tracing worksheets for the students one day. The students responded well to his teaching style and I believe his key to success in our class was his natural ability to communicate effectively with all of the students, including those who are nonverbal. This fostered an accessible learning environment from which we all benefitted.

I'm happy that Eric is applying to get his credential and look forward to hearing about his future career as a teacher. Please feel free to reach out if you have any questions about Eric's time working at Kearny, or if you require any more information from me.

Sincerely,
